Lyrical Beauty

One of the most striking features of Haw's poetry is its lyrical beauty. Her poems are often written in a free verse style, but they are always musical and evocative. Haw uses language in a way that creates a sense of beauty and wonder, even when she is writing about difficult subjects.

For example, in her poem "The River," Haw describes the natural beauty of a river, but she also uses the river as a metaphor for the passage of time and the human condition. The poem is full of rich imagery and evocative language, and it captures the beauty and the sadness of life.

Exploration of Personal and Social Issues

Another important aspect of Haw's poetry is her exploration of personal and social issues. Haw is not afraid to write about difficult subjects, such as poverty, homelessness, and violence. However, she always does so with compassion and understanding.

For example, in her poem "The Homeless Man," Haw describes the life of a homeless man who lives on the streets of Melbourne. The poem is heartbreaking, but it is also full of empathy and compassion. Haw shows us the humanity of the homeless man, and she forces us to confront the social injustice that allows people to live on the streets.

Commitment to Social Justice

Haw's poetry is also characterized by its commitment to social justice. Haw is a passionate advocate for the poor and the marginalized, and she uses her poetry to speak out against injustice and to promote social change.

For example, in her poem "The Refugees," Haw writes about the plight of refugees who are fleeing war and persecution. The poem is a powerful indictment of the policies that create refugees, and it calls for compassion and understanding towards those who are seeking asylum.

Penny Haw is one of Australia's most important contemporary poets. Her work is characterized by its lyrical beauty, its exploration of personal and social issues, and its commitment to social justice. Haw's poetry gives voice to the voiceless, and it challenges us to confront the injustices of our world.
